

The Courtyard

A little closer to the sea.

THE OCEAN EDITION VOLUME 02

MOTHER AND CALF / STILL FROM THE LOOPING VIDEO EDITION

Some moments ask you to stop

A mother whale and her calf move through the blue, close together. It is the kind of scene we might expect to see in a nature documentary—and then, suddenly, it is there in front of us. For a moment, the conversation falls quiet. We stop thinking about what comes next and simply watch. Sometimes, that is all it takes to feel a little closer to the world around us.

Companion HTML edition opens with a silent looping video. This PDF presents a still.

BEFORE THE DAY BEGINS

The pleasure of an early start

The shoreline has its own way of drawing you outside. A band of white water reaches across the sand, then slips back into the blue. Before the day fills with conversation and plans, take a little time to look. The view changes with every wave.

Leave breakfast for a little later. Bring a camera if you like, or simply enjoy a morning that asks very little of you. Some of the details you remember most are the ones you never thought to put on an itinerary.

AN UNHURRIED AFTERNOON

A place to pause

Palm shadows fall across the blue of the pool. Beyond the terrace, the sea comes into view between the trees. After a morning along the shore, it is a lovely place to settle in: a towel over the back of a chair, a cool drink within reach, and a book opened where you left off.

Stay for a swim, then linger over lunch. Let the afternoon stretch into an easy conversation, with no one quite ready to get up from the table. There is pleasure in having somewhere to go—and just as much in finding a place you are happy to remain.

What would your ideal day look like?

A quiet morning, a long lunch, or a few days with no fixed plans.

Media supplied by Jamie; used with permission. Sample only; no current booking offer.